The dispute as to 'the' appropriate way to study human social behaviour is a dispute about human nature. In most, if not all, subjects concerned with human behaviour, there is a fault line between determinism and free will. The division is most marked in subjects such as philosophy, theology, sociology, psychology and biology.

Determinism and Free Will | S-cool, the revision website

Sociology degrees study human society by analysing and investigating it using several methods of empirical research.

Sociology is a branch of Social Sciences, covering topics such as deviance, social stratification, social class, culture, social mobility, law, and religion. Sociology is also related to disciplines such as Anthropology, Social Psychology, or Philosophy.
