Aging is associated with morphologic and functional alterations of organ systems including the genitourinary tract. Aging of the bladder leads to urgency, frequency, dysuria, recurrent urinary tract infections and incontinence both in aging men and women. These symptoms occur frequently, are very distressing and influence daily life of the aging person. Medication and incontinence devices are ...

If tissue level changes drive the aging bladder phenotype, parallel changes should be observed across these domains. In contrast, a lack of inter domain correlation across age groups would support the hypothesis that urinary performance is a measure of the physiologic reserve, dependent on centrally mediated adaptive mechanisms in the aging system.

The aging bladder phenotype is not the direct consequence ...

The bladder's capacity also changes with aging. "It's very subtle. It's not like all of a sudden overnight, you can't hold anything," Kavalier says. "But your capacity could go from 500 cc to, in your 50s, 150 to 200 cc (or 5 to 7 ounces). You could start to feel the urge to go then, or start to have bladder spasms." ...

Aging Bladder and Frequent Urination. The normal functions of the bladder are urine storage and urine expulsion at the right intervals. These functions could be impaired when age changes the structure of the bladder. Scientists in Austria conducted a study on 436 men and women aged 40 to 93. The scientists found significant age-related changes ...
